

Fifth graders cut out these silhouettes of each other modeling physical expressions of slavery and freedom during their class's 2004-2005 expedition, "Searching for Freedom."

Learning expeditions are a hallmark of the Genesee Community Charter School at the Rochester Museum & Science Center.

Fifth graders cut out these silhouettes of each other modeling physical expressions of slavery and freedom during their class's 2004-2005 expedition, "Searching for Freedom."

Learning expeditions are a hallmark of the Genesee Community Charter School at the Rochester Museum & Science Center.

Khari, a fifth grader, cut out this silhouette of another student modeling physical expressions of slavery and freedom during his class's 2004-2005 expedition, "Searching for Freedom."

Learning expeditions are a hallmark of the
Genesee Community Charter School
at the Rochester Museum & Science Center.

Alexis, a fifth grader, cut out this silhouette of another student modeling physical expressions of slavery and freedom during her class's 2004-2005 expedition, "Searching for Freedom."

Learning expeditions are a hallmark of the
Genesee Community Charter School
at the Rochester Museum & Science Center.

Tatiana, a fifth grader, cut out this silhouette of another student modeling physical expressions of slavery and freedom during her class's 2004-2005 expedition, "Searching for Freedom."

Learning expeditions are a hallmark of the Genesee Community Charter School at the Rochester Museum & Science Center.

Emma, a fifth grader, cut out this silhouette of another student modeling physical expressions of slavery and freedom during her class's 2004-2005 expedition, "Searching for Freedom."

Learning expeditions are a hallmark of the Genesee Community Charter School at the Rochester Museum & Science Center.

