“Mary do you need your fluffy coat?” Ma asked. “No, I don’t. I’ll be fine,” Mary said leaving the old wooden cabin to search for firewood. Soon it started to storm. “Pa where’s Mary?” I asked pacing across the wooden cabin like crazy. “I don’t know,” Pa said. I put on my coat and ran out the wooden door to find Mary. “Mary! Mary where are you!” I screamed. I heard a faint, “Help.” “I’m coming Mary!” I screamed.

Finally I found her huddled under a tree. “Mary how did you get lost in the cold storm?” I asked. “I...I...I was looking for dry firewood and then the storm hit and then...” Mary said crying before I interrupted her. “It’s okay. Let’s go home,” I said as we started walking towards home. “Ya, let’s go home, and thank you,” Mary said. “You’re welcome,” I said smiling.

It was in the middle of the day, we had just passed Courthouse and Jailhouse Rocks. Courthouse Rock looks like a castle or a big building and Jailhouse Rock look like a small building. I thought I saw a few Indians. I said slowly to the others, "Be aware, I think I saw some Indians." Jack my friend and I grabbed our black rifles. All of a sudden the trail went into a big red blaze and caught my whole wagon by surprise. I put down my gun. "The Indians must have set the fire!" I shouted loudly. I saw the brown hair of the driver, and I heard Jack say quickly, "John, the driver is in shock so help me turn the wagon." I did as I was told, and I tried to turn the big, white, wagon with Jack. Other people dug up dirt, threw it on the fire, and dug a fire break to control the fire. We finally turned the wagon, and went around the fire, but the fire flicked at one of our lead oxen and caught the oxen on fire. "Oh no," I said surprised. We put a coat on the oxen to smother the flames, but the oxen was badly burned and weak and we couldn't do anything about it. The driver took back the controls. "We need to hurry up and get with the rest of the wagon train," the driver said calmly. "You are right," Jack answered. Later the burned oxen died so we borrowed one from someone else.

It was a cold night in April, two friends Robert and Peter had to go on guard duty. They did not want to but they did it. After a long time Peter said, "It's cold. I want to go into the wagon." "No!" said Robert, "For the last time I will not let you go inside the wagon." After a few minutes Peter said pointing to a shadow, "I think there is an Indian." "No it is a rock," said Robert. "I don't think so," Peter answered. "Well then shoot it," Robert said. Then Peter shot the Indian, but it made no sound. "I really think it's a rock, let me go check," Robert said. He walked over and saw it was a rock. "Yeah it is a rock," Robert called. "Aw, I wanted to catch an Indian," said Peter.

The sun was beating down on us, walking on the hot sand was hard. "It's one hot day," I said. "When are we going to get to Scotts Bluff?" Sarah asked. "In two hours," Ma said. "Good," Sarah said. Suddenly the wagon began sinking in the soft sand. "We have to get something out of the wagon," Pa cried. "How about the piano?" I suggested. "Ok," Ma said sadly. I helped Pa get the piano out of the wagon.

Two hours later we were walking by Scotts Bluff! I decided to climb it. After I was done I went to the wagon to see what Ma was doing. I found her crying. "What is the matter Ma?" I asked. "You know the piano we left?" she asked. "Ya," I said. "Well that piano was my brother's. He loved playing the piano. One day we were horsing around in the backyard he heard a rattling noise, so he went toward it. It was a rattlesnake. He got bitten by it. So now I have nothing to remember my brother by." "I'm sorry," I told Ma, "But you still have your memories." "Thank you John," Ma said.

“Snap!” “Dangit!” I said angrily. Our wagon tongue broke because of a rock. The rock was so sharp! We had to carve a new wagon tongue. It was going to take 3 or 4 hours to carve. So, John went out for food, and Pepper went to find more wood. I started carving a spare piece of wood from building the wagon. John came back with a dead jack rabbit. “Who wants food?” John said. Pepper came back with a stack of wood in her arms. “Are you done with the wagon tongue?” she asked. “Yup,” I said. Then we put the new wagon tongue on.

“Crack.” “Oh no! We ran over a huge rock!” Maddie cried. “Can I help?” Jon asked. “You can go tell pa,” Maddie told Jon. Jon ran off to tell Pa. “Pa, the wagon is broken,” Jon said. “We will need another wheel,” said Pa. Next we had to figure out who to buy a wheel from. We asked the Johnson family. “Hey,” said Pa. “Do you have an extra wagon wheel?” “Well you will need to pay 10 dollars,” Mr. Johnson said. “Okay,” Pa said. Soon our wagon got fixed.
