By Sam Jungbluth

Robert Frost was a very influential poet. He won the Pulitzer prize four times and won the Congressional Gold Medal in 1960. At the 1961 Kennedy Inauguration, he had to write a poem for president John F. Kennedy and read it to him. Frost served as a US poet Laureate from 1958 to 1959, and in 1962 he went on a diplomatic mission to the Soviet Union. This famous poet found his inspiration from a unique place. Frost was inspired by New England farm life and you can see this in his poetry.

Frost's poetry was a mix of modern and traditional and his inspiration was about appreciating your surroundings and farmyard life chores. Countryside and sharing every moment and taking time to appreciate your surroundings and wildlife he feels joy in chores and talks about a bird migrating and stopping work to talk to a friend. He wrote in the voice of a New England farmer. His inspiration was appreciation of wildlife and farm life.

Frost poems show appreciation of nature. One example is "Stopping By Woods on a Snowy Evening". It is about stopping and watching nature. see its beauty. "The Pasture" is about chores and it shows that farm chores can be fun. Another example is "A Time To Talk." It shows us that even if you are doing something important, you can still talk to your friend. Frost was inspired by nature and farm life and a New England farmer's life.

Frost was inspired by farm life and often used the voice of an England farmer's life. His work also did make a difference in poultry. My favorite poem by Frost is "The Pasture" because it shows chores can be fun. In love that dog by Sharon Creech Jack was inspired by "Stopping By Woods On A Snowy Evening" Jack writes another poem.
